

Employee Attrition Analysis

Executive Summary

This project aimed to understand the main reasons behind employee attrition and provide practical recommendations that can help the HR team improve employee retention and reduce future employee exits.

Key Findings

- Sales Department recorded the highest employee attrition rate.
- Sales Representatives showed the highest employee exit rate among all job roles.
- Lower Monthly Income was strongly associated with higher employee attrition.
- Frequent Overtime, Age, Job Level and Distance From Home also influenced employee retention.
- Employee attrition is caused by multiple workplace factors, not salary alone.

HR Recommendations

- Focus retention efforts on the Sales department through regular one-to-one discussions and employee engagement activities.
- Review salary growth, career development opportunities and recognition programs for employees who may be at higher risk of leaving.
- Monitor employees who frequently work overtime and encourage a healthier work-life balance.

Conclusion

The findings from this study can help HR identify employees who may require additional support. However, these results should be used as a decision-support tool because factors such as personal circumstances, leadership style and company culture are not included in the available data. Combining these insights with regular employee feedback can help improve employee satisfaction and long-term retention.